

GOOD FOOD

Friday, August 16, 2013

8 New York City restaurants that grow their own food

Bell, Book, and Candle

This West Village destination thought way outside of the box when dreaming up its soil-free rooftop Aeroponic tower garden. (Yes, Aeroponic.) It consists of 60 5- to 6-foot towers that produce organic greens like arugula, plus okra, herbs, strawberries, and melons. And you can experience the produce on your plate or in a glass—with, say, a Rooftop Mixed Greens salad and a Rooftop Mint Mojito. www.bbandcnyc.com